BENJAMIN H. WEISINGER)

Case No. 5:12-cr-78

AMENDED ENTRY ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR JUDGMENT OF ACQUITTAL
(Doc. 86)

This case comes to the court on Defendant Benjamin H. Weisinger's motion for judgment of acquittal. (Doc. 86.) On April 5, 2013, a jury in the District of Vermont found Defendant guilty of one count of knowingly inducing a minor to engage in sexually explicit conduct for the purpose of producing a visual depiction of such conduct, using materials that have been transported in interstate commerce in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 2251(a) (Count One), two counts of knowingly receiving child pornography in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 2252(a)(2) (Counts Two and Three), and one count of knowingly possessing child pornography in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 2252(a)(4)(B) (Count Four). The same minor victim, Defendant's ex-girlfriend's daughter, is depicted in the child pornography in all four counts.

Defendant asks the court to vacate his conviction for possession of child pornography (Count Four of the Second Superseding Indictment), arguing that that conviction is the lesser included offense of his conviction for receipt of child pornography (Count Two of the Second Superseding Indictment). Defendant moves for judgment of acquittal as to all remaining counts of conviction, claiming the evidence was insufficient to establish the interstate element of those charges.

I. Motion for Judgment of Acquittal: Lesser Included Offense.

Although Defendant did not raise this issue at trial, the court agrees that the majority view is that possession of child pornography is a lesser included offense of receipt of child pornography where, as here, the offenses are based upon the same image and the same range of dates.¹ The government does not oppose Defendant's motion with regard to Count Four, however, it reserves the right to request reinstatement of the conviction on Count Four should the conviction on Count Two be vacated on appeal. See United States v. Osorio Estrada, 751 F.2d 128, 135 (2d Cir. 1984) (Kearse, J., concurring) (observing that "it would have been appropriate to vacate the convictions on the two lesser-included offenses, on the condition that the convictions on those offenses would be reinstated in the event that the conviction on the greater offense, Count 1, were ever overturned for reasons not affecting the validity of the [other] convictions.").

For the foregoing reasons, the court hereby GRANTS IN PART Defendant's motion for judgment of acquittal, and VACATES Defendant's conviction for possession of child pornography (Count Four of the Second Superseding Indictment) as a lesser included offense of his conviction for receipt of child pornography (Count Two of the Second Superseding Indictment). The government may seek to reinstate the conviction on Count Four in the event the conviction on Count Two is vacated on appeal.

II. Motion for Judgment of Acquittal: Sufficiency of Evidence.

Defendant moves for a judgment of acquittal as to all remaining counts, renewing his challenge at trial to the sufficiency of the evidence with regard to the interstate commerce element of each count but conceding that the Second Circuit's precedent "weighs against this type of challenge." (Doc. 86 at 4.). As his sole argument, Defendant asserts that "the government has failed to meet its burden where, as in this case, the defendant and victim were within the same state and town" and thus "the government has failed to demonstrate any actual nexus with or to interstate commerce, and the only connection to interstate commerce in some cases was a text or email." (Doc. 86 at 5.) Similar to the manner in which this issue was raised at trial, Defendant cites no legal authority for his argument.

In challenging his conviction based upon the sufficiency of the evidence under Fed. R. Crim. P. 29, Defendant bears a "very heavy burden." United States v. Bicaksiz, 194 F.3d 390, 398 (2d Cir. 1999). The test for sufficiency is "whether a rational jury could conclude beyond a reasonable doubt that a defendant is guilty of a crime charged." United States v. Eppolito, 543 F.3d 25, 45 (2d Cir. 2008). The court "must review the evidence in the light most favorable to the government, drawing all reasonable inferences in its favor." United States v. Archer, 2011 WL 4360013, at *7 (2d Cir. Sept. 20, 2011) (quoting United States v. Gaskin, 364 F.3d 438, 459 (2d Cir. 2004)). It must also resolve "all . . . issues of credibility in favor of the verdict." United States v. Howard, 214 F.3d 361, 363 (2d Cir. 2000). The conviction must be sustained if "any rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of a crime beyond a reasonable doubt." Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307, 319 (1979).

The evidence at trial was presented over five days and included testimony from nineteen witnesses, as well as forensic evidence from Defendant's cell phone and computer, Internet and cellphone usage records, and a forensic evaluation of the victim's cell phone. The government presented uncontested evidence that the computer used to produce the child pornography in question was manufactured outside the United States. See United States v. Ramos, 685 F.3d 120, 133 (2d Cir. 2012) (holding the use of “non-American made computers or digital equipment to produce child pornography satisfies the interstate or foreign commerce element.”).

The government’s evidence also showed that Defendant solicited and induced the production of child pornography through messages sent from his cell phone to the victim’s cell phone which were routed by Verizon Wireless to a “switch” outside Vermont. The government demonstrated that the image set forth in Count Three travelled in interstate commerce in this manner. It thus matters not that the Defendant and the victim were located in the same state, and indeed the same household, because their communications used to facilitate the crime as well as the image of child pornography, itself, travelled in interstate commerce. See United States v. Giordano, 442 F.3d 30, 39 (2d Cir. 2006) (ruling the “intrastate use of [a] telephone constitute[s] use of a facility of interstate commerce” and thus can satisfy the jurisdictional commerce clause element of a federal offense).

Representatives from Google and Yahoo further testified that the servers for their companies are located outside of Vermont. The evidence showed that the image of child pornography in Counts One and Two was sent by Defendant from his Yahoo email account to his Google email account via the Internet. “The [I]nternet is an instrumentality of interstate commerce.” United States v. Hornaday, 392 F.3d 1306, 1311 (11th Cir. 2004). Again, it matters not that the Defendant and the victim used the Internet from the same household and felt the primary impact of the crime there. “Congress clearly has the power to regulate the [I]nternet, as it does other instrumentalities and channels of interstate commerce, and to prohibit its use for harmful or immoral purposes regardless of whether those purposes would have a primarily intrastate impact.” Id. As the Second Circuit held in United States v. Holston, 343 F.3d 83 (2d Cir. 2003) in addressing a constitutional challenge to 18 U.S.C. § 2251, “when Congress regulates a class of activities that substantially affect interstate commerce, ‘[t]he fact that certain intrastate activities within this class . . . may not actually have a significant effect on interstate commerce is . . . irrelevant.” Id. at 90 (citation omitted).

Examining the evidence in the light most favorable to the government, the Defendant has not sustained his “heavy burden” of establishing that no rational juror could find that the interstate or foreign commerce elements of Counts One, Two, and Three have been satisfied by the evidence introduced at trial.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Defendant’s Motion for Judgment of Acquittal (Doc. 86) is GRANTED with regard to Count Four and otherwise DENIED.
SO ORDERED.
